'One time, however, we were near quarrelling. He said the pleasantest manner of spending a hot July day was lying from morning till evening on a grassy bank in the middle of the moors, with the bees humming dreamily about among the flowers, and the larks singing high up overhead, and the blue sky and bright sun shining steadily and cloudlessly.

That was his most perfect idea of happiness: mine was rocking in a green tree, with a west wind blowing, and bright white clouds flitting rapidly above; and not only larks but blackbirds and cuckoos, pouring out music on every side. The moors seen at a distance, but close by great fields of long grass waving in the breeze; and woods and sounding water, and the whole world awake and wild with joy

He wanted all to lie in complete stillness; I wanted all to sparkle and dance in a glorious celebration. I said his heaven would be only half alive; and he said mine would be chaos. At last, we agreed to try both, as soon as the right weather came; and then we were friends again.

Emily Bronte, Wuthering Heights
