

In the US, programmes like Big Brothers, Big Sisters believe that one of the most powerful ways to change the trajectory of a young person's life is a consistent relationship with a positive, caring older mentor. Should Spanish schools include mentoring programmes in which older students tutor younger ones?

Should Spanish schools implement mentoring programmes?

Nowadays, many teenagers are in danger of joining gangs. Perhaps they live in slums or lack strong family ties. This is why I believe mentoring programmes should be implemented in Spanish schools.

Firstly, these types of programmes help young students improve their academic performance. Moreover, they also gain confidence in themselves and build close relationships with older students who are good role models for them. This can help adolescents avoid juvenile delinquency.

On the other hand, these programmes are also very helpful for the mentors. They feel good because they help society deal with serious problems. Furthermore, they develop responsibility, communication skills and leadership, which can be useful in their future.

In conclusion, I believe that if Spanish schools included mentoring programmes, they would improve learning and help students develop important personal skills, making schools positive places.
